EDWARDS GETS BIG QUANTIFICATION

Legion Greets V. D. Commander at Convention in Faneuil Hall

Amid thunderous applause, which rose to a climax of wild cheering, General Clarence R. Edwards, accompanied by Governor Coolidge and Mayor Peters, was escorted into Faneuil Hall just before the opening of the convention of the American Legion today.

A special committee conducted the three distinguished guests to their places. This committee consisted of Colonel William H. Hogan of Fitchburg, Captain Henry D. Corman of Newton and Captain Thomas L. Lavelle of Danvers.

Council Edward L. Logan, commander of the Massachusetts branch of the legion, called the meeting to order. He was also one of the speakers. Others included, besides the three guests of honor, H. G. Chalmers, director of the Bureau of War Risk Insurance, and Dr. U. S. Lankin, chairman of national training. Rev. M. J. O'Connor of St. Peter's Church, Cambridge, pronounced the invocation.

Enthusiasm broke out afresh when General Edwards arose to speak. He was plainly the hero of the convention. On being introduced by Colonel Logan, he saluted, and was obliged to kneel the gesture before the applause died down. General Edwards addressed the gathering as "Chairman and fellow-Yankee."

Bail confessed to taking the ring according to the police, and told a pawn ticket showing that the ring was pawned for $1000. In court he pleaded guilty. Having recovered the ring, Mrs. Miller said she would not prosecute.

The only Miller in the Boston directory who is engaged in the rubber business is Joseph Miller, dealer in rubber goods at No. 124 Atlantic avenue. His home is at No. 124 Commonwealth avenue. Mr. Miller was not at his place of business and it was stated that he would not return until Monday.

THE GENERAL STAFFS AND UNIVERSAL SERVICE IN NEW ARMY BILL

SENATE MEASURE MAKES PROVISIONS FOR STANDING ARMY OF ONLY 280,000

By International News Service.

Washington, D. C., Jan. 3.—Provisions for a standing army of 280,000 enlisted men; universal military training; a system of National Guard under State control and national mobilization; and a reserve system of promotion for army officers to be included in the army reorganization bill proposed today by a subcommittee of the Senate Military Affairs Committee.

The provisions of the bill, which will be reported from the subcommittee on military reorganization to the Senate, are as follows:

Provisions for our overseas personnel.

A universal training establishment, including the provision of training for trained men and officers to conduct the national training.

Organized reserve only in the army, to be included in the bill.

A National Guard composed of volunteers available for military service in the National Guard and for reinforcement of the regular force in the National Guard.

The creation of two branches of the general staff, one to carry out the recommendations of the Secretary of War, and the other to be with the troops in the field.

This will remove the condition of the National Guard from the subordinate to General March, and placing it in a higher position than that of March. It will give the opportunity of seeing that the bill in the field.

Provision for staff in the field.

The bill continues in the subordinate staff in practically an advisory capacity to the Secretary of War, and the American Legion, the character of the bill of the new army will be those who fought in the world war.

The question of service in the National training units of the National Guard will be removed from the organization of the citizens army in France and those sent by the National Guard will be added to, as far as possible.

This Sunday School Boy Had Certainly Heard of Ruth

Saco, Me., Jan. 3.—A Sunday school class was in session at the Saco church in this city, and the teacher announced that the subject was "The Ruth."

"Well," said the teacher, "what do you know about Ruth?" "I've read the story of Ruth," said the boy, "and I know that she was a foreigner."

"What," said the teacher, "can you tell us about Ruth?"

"Quick as a flash the proud boy replied: 'She made twenty-nine home runs last year.'"

This shows how widespread is the theme of the Red Sox pitcher, and how closely the boys read the sport pages of the newspapers.

JENKINS BARRED TO PREVENT BREAK

Mexican Attorney in New York Gives Details to Senate Probers Under Protest

By International News Service.

Washington, Jan. 3.—Mexican intervention in New York suggested to Luis Cabrera, minister of finance to Mexico, that he had been furnished to receive United States Consul Agent William A. Jenkins from jail to avoid a diplomatic break. It was testified before the Senate foreign relations committee on Mexican affairs today by Emilio Lopez Figueroa, a Mexican attorney in New York. Jenkins, minister of finance to Mexico, was arrested on the grounds that the committee had requested the extradition of the sons of the United States.

Asked as to his knowledge of the telegram sent to Mexico suggesting the release of Jenkins on bail, he said the telegram made the suggestion but did not name Jenkins as the man to furnish the bail.

Francis J. Keefe, counsel for the committee, asked if Jenkins had not gone to Germany to organize a large German colony in Mexico.

"I do not believe it," replied the witness.

The witness denied any connection with the Mexican government or its secret service. He branded as "false" the charges and statements made to President Carranza which might have caused the extradition of the sons of the United States.

Asked as to his knowledge of the telegram sent to Mexico suggesting the release of Jenkins on bail, he said the telegram made the suggestion but did not name Jenkins as the man to furnish the bail.

"There is no such thing as a fallen arch of the foot. It just looks like an arch and even as it does not fall, but rolls over if it gives way," says Dr. Frederic J. Cotton of Boston.

Dr. Cotton makes his statements in the current number of the Boston Medical and Surgical Journal.

CHAPLIN FORD'S FUNNY

A tar-brooded street holds, of course, limited possibilities for comedy, but only Charlie Chaplin could have extracted the potential possibilities, as he has done in his latest million-dollar First National comedy, "A Day's Pleasure." While the whole film is one riotous, continuous, irresistible laugh, the incidents wrapped around the tar-brooded street are among the funniest.

First Chaplin's balking Bohemian, in costia, gets stuck; then Charlie himself gets stuck, and, standing at an angle of forty-five degrees, proceeds to argue with a bulky, truffled, who also gets stuck. But it is useless to try to describe all the events which happen. They must be seen to be appreciated.

The beauty of "A Day's Pleasure" is that despite its swiftly moving comic action it is a series of experiences which might well have happened to anyone. It is based on life, and, in the telling, it is a series of experiences which, in reality, are in one. It is equal in every respect to the best of comedy, and, in its own way, it is a masterpiece of comedy, just what the average person would feel like doing under such circumstances.

About Mariel.

Arthur Mariel has made photoplay musical interpretation of life, work, and the theatre managers and actors come to Boston from all over the country to consult him. Mariel, the theatre orchestra in and around Boston are pupils of Mr. Mariel.

When playing the magnificent instrument in Gordon's Olympia, however, Mr. Mariel is his best. This is really two organs in one. It is equal in every respect to the best of comedy, and, in its own way, it is a masterpiece of comedy, just what the average person would feel like doing under such circumstances.

Good Pictures.

At picture houses for rules admirably fitted to their talents, J. Warren Korrigan, who has been in the theatre for many years, has a number of films in his repertoire. This is really two organs in one. It is equal in every respect to the best of comedy, and, in its own way, it is a masterpiece of comedy, just what the average person would feel like doing under such circumstances.

WALDORE THEATRE

Condensing its successful policy of presenting first-run pictures for a period of one week, the Waldo Theatre announces as the attraction beginning Monday, the latest W. W. film, "A Day's Pleasure." This is the first time that the Waldo Theatre has presented a picture of this nature. It is a masterpiece of comedy, just what the average person would feel like doing under such circumstances.

SCOLLAY CO. OLYMPIA

Charlie Chaplin, appearing in the picture, "A Day's Pleasure," will be the attraction next week at the Scollay Theatre. This is the first time that the Scollay Theatre has presented a picture of this nature. It is a masterpiece of comedy, just what the average person would feel like doing under such circumstances.

LOEWS ORPHEUM THEATRE

Charlie Chaplin, appearing in the picture, "A Day's Pleasure," will be the attraction next week at the Loews Orpheum Theatre. This is the first time that the Loews Orpheum Theatre has presented a picture of this nature. It is a masterpiece of comedy, just what the average person would feel like doing under such circumstances.

OPENING MONDAY

"AND REYNOLDS' REVIEW."

Glance Parker, the main title picture, is a masterpiece of comedy, just what the average person would feel like doing under such circumstances.

"The Pasture Show."

The "Pasture Show," from the Waldo Theatre, which opened last season and proved one of the most popular attractions, returns for two weeks only to the Scollay Theatre, beginning Monday. Since leaving Boston, it has had a record run in Chicago. The picture has many changes in costumes, songs, and dances, etc., but the plot is practically unchanged. It includes Roy Cummings, Eugene and Willie Howard, and other popular actors. The picture is a masterpiece of comedy, just what the average person would feel like doing under such circumstances.

LANCASTER THEATRE

At the Lancaster the first half of the week, will be shown Dorothy Dandridge's "The Flame of the Torch." A photoplay in which the star is fitted with the picture, "The Flame of the Torch," will be shown at the Lancaster. This is the first time that the Lancaster Theatre has presented a picture of this nature. It is a masterpiece of comedy, just what the average person would feel like doing under such circumstances.

McISAAC says that

"BETTY, BE GOOD," will move to the Shubert for two weeks more. Although deluged at the Wilbur by previous bookings, the little opera had too many friends to leave Boston.

"THE CANARY," with Cavendish and Julia Sanderson, continues the signal prosperity of the Colonial. Here is one house which deluged to musical comedy.

"THE UNKNOWN PURPLE" is one of the liveliest and weirdest melodramas ever seen in Boston. It gives you a new variety of thrill, majesty.

"TUMBLE IN," a good-natured and spirited force, with a fine cast topped by Ada Mead, gives good measure for your money at the Park Square.

"THREE FACES EAST," at the Tremont, is playing to capacity continually. Violet Heming and the original New York cast give a fine performance of an exciting spy play.

PARK THEATRE—"EVERYBODY," one of the most striking of recent photoplays, continues at this house. Violet Heming heads the cast of the morality play in the films.

"ROBIN HOOD," the greatest American light opera, is being well played and will be held over for a second week at the Arlington.

disappearance of the leading character, was, probably the highest his glowing review. It is a good play, and anybody who has seen it will be able to explain it. The play is a masterpiece of comedy, just what the average person would feel like doing under such circumstances.

Stage & Screen

by F. M. ISAAC.

THE KEYS TO THE KEYS

Minister's Run at Wilbur.

If you see this Skinner to playing a thoroughly conscientious man you must be a fine fellow, but it is at his best when his role requires something rough, vagabond and unscrupulous.

So far as I know Skinner never picked a pocket or robbed a bank off duty, but if you go back over his stage career you will find him always up to tricks. Which reminds me of the celebrated poem:

"Little Willie checked his sister, she was dead before he missed her."

Willie's always up to tricks; and he's sure, it's only me.

In "The Honor of the Family" he was the graceful, vaudeville, Philip Briggs. In "Kismet" he was a machine-like big brother, who committed a murder or two and many thefts and from your regard.

As "Tony" in "Mister Antonio" he was nearest to virtue, but he was a good deal of a scoundrel at that. And back in the Clyde Witchesday, as "His Grace of Gramont," he made a very admirable libertine.

In "Peter Haden" he has a conventional role, an Italian with quite a lot of racial in him.

And yet Otto Skinner is the son of a minister.

Paul Seal Performance.

Julia Seal, the first hero of "A Day's Pleasure," is an inventor, Joseph Seal, the conscientious and the public purveyor of the "The Report" is a masterpiece of comedy, just what the average person would feel like doing under such circumstances.

This Day in Our History—January 3, 1920
THIS is the anniversary of the Battle of Princeton, in 1777, between armies commanded by Washington and Cornwallis. Washington forced the British to retire, thus relieving New Jersey from the threat of occupation, reviving the hopes of the colonies and seizing quantities of much-needed supplies.

Intensely Interesting Mystery Film Serial

By E. PHILLIP S. OPPENHEIM

One of the most interesting and popular writers of the up-to-date style of fiction treating of love and intrigue.

"The Cinema Murder" in motion pictures, with Miss Marion Davies as the charming heroine, a Cosmopolitan production, will soon be shown at all leading theatres. Screened under direction of George D. Baker. Presented by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation as a Paramount-Artcraft Picture.

How the Story Starts

Philip Romilly, a poor London teacher, calls on the girl he is engaged to at his old home, Dutton Magna, and she tells him she is tired of waiting for him to get enough money to marry on, and has promised to wed Douglas. He knows that her house is better furnished than when he saw it last. He tells him with his poverty and to leave the house, walking towards a canal nearby. He goes to a Liverpool hotel and represents himself as Douglas Romilly. He takes passage for America. He takes young movie actress, at his table on board ship.

"VERY late, thank you," Philip answered, a little vaguely. "Tell me, Miss Dalcant," he went on. "Meaning slightly towards her, and with a note of curiosity in his tone, 'I want to know your candid opinion of the last act of the play I saw in—Henderson's, don't you?' I made up my mind that if I had the privilege of meeting you, I would ask you that question."

"I know exactly why," she declared, with a quick little nod of appreciation. "Listen. They talked together for some time, earnestly. Mr. Greene addressed his conversation to his neighbors lower down the table. It was not until the arrival of dessert that Philip and his vis-a-vis abandoned their mutual interest. 'Tell me, how you written your story,' Mr. Romilly. Miss Dalcant then asked him with interest."

Most Difficult.
"I have made an attempt at it," he confessed. "Most difficult thing in the world to write a play," Mr. Raymond Greene interposed, seeing an opportunity to join more in the conversation. "Most difficult thing in the world, I should say. Now with pictures it's entirely different. The slightest little happening in everyday life may give you the leaving forward in her place. "Please go on. What happened when they came out?"

The Whole Point

"That," Mr. Greene said impressively, "is the point of the story. The train remained standing there, as I have said, for several minutes—as many minutes, in fact, as it would have taken them seconds to have traversed that tunnel. Notwithstanding that, they neither of them appeared again. I sat there, believe me, with my eyes fastened upon that path, and when the train started I leaned out of the window until we had rounded the curve and we were out of sight, but I never saw either of those two men again. That was the beginning of a film story for you? What do you want more than that? There's dramatic interest, surprise, an original situation."

"After all, I suppose the explanation was quite a simple one," Mr. Romilly remarked. "They were probably accidentally separated, and they stayed to have a chat."

Mr. Raymond Greene shook his head doubtfully. "All I can say to that is that it was a very queer place to choose for a little friendly conversation," he pronounced. "They were both tall, dark, about the same height. I should say—and it would have been impossible for them to have been stood upright."

Raining Heavily

"You mentioned the fact, did you not," the lady who called herself Miss Dalcant, "that it was raining heavily when they were separated? That was the time? Perhaps they stayed under the bridge to shelter."

"That's something I never thought of," Mr. Greene admitted. "Perhaps for the reason that they were both dressed quite differently. The young man wore the dark clothes had even an umbrella. I must admit that I allowed my mind to travel in one direction. Professional interest, I suppose. It was a fairly broad canal, and the water was nearly up to the tow-path. I was sitting there, I suppose, for some time, but I had not time to think of anything but the narrow path and the canal. I was sitting there, I suppose, for some time, but I had not time to think of anything but the narrow path and the canal. I was sitting there, I suppose, for some time, but I had not time to think of anything but the narrow path and the canal."

Mr. Raymond Greene stopped short. He gazed in amazement at Elizabeth Dalcant, who had suddenly clutched his hand. There was something in her face which puzzled as well as startled him. She was looking at her opposite neighbor, who was turned back towards the narrator of this thrilling tale as the man's face brightened from her lips.

"Please stop," she begged. "You are too dramatic. Mr. Greene. You really frighten me."

"Frighten you?" he repeated. "My dear Miss Dalcant, I am not. I am only trying to tell you the truth. I suppose it is very absurd of me, but you were smiling at me, and I was thinking of what might have been the case. I was sitting there, I suppose, for some time, but I had not time to think of anything but the narrow path and the canal."

his adieu to the little company whom he had taken under his charge. Philip Romilly was gazing after him with a look of surprise. "Kind of delicate young fellow, that," he remarked. "Nice face, too. Don't help thinking that I've met or seen some one like him lately."

CHAPTER V.
Philip Romilly found himself alone at last with the things which he had carried—darkness, solitude, the rushing of the salt water, the sense of open space. On the other, the sheltered side of the steamer, long lines of passengers were stretched in wicker chairs, smoking and drinking their coffee, but where he was no one came except an occasional promenade. Yet even here was a disappointment. He had come for peace, for a brief escape from the thrall of memories regarding the girl who had been charged with the dream of horror—and there was to be no peace.

In the shadowy darkness which rested upon the white-churned sea, he saw the figure of a man who for those few brief minutes he had heard with a desperate and passionate hatred. He saw the broken photograph, the glass splintered into a thousand places. He saw the man himself, choking, sinking down between the black waters; heard the stifled cry from his pale lips, saw the slow dawning agony of death in his distorted features. Some one was playing a mandolin down to the mischievous melody and the languid, sinuous, crany-voiced Vals came to take the madcap's place.

She went over and sank down next to her husband on the big couch that stood in front of the fireplace. She didn't touch him, but I could see that he felt her presence and that she was there. But it seemed for the moment as if she were actually older than the husband who was regarded by her father as a

In Ocean's Depths
IN the greatest depths of the ocean the creatures are blind. Owing to the enormous pressure the fish have light bones and thin muscles. Most of these fish are black or silvery, and they have long, delicate filaments spreading from their bodies; they are bound to live upon one another, and are exceptionally voracious.

second class. He heard the feet of a dancer upon the deck, the little murmur of applause.

Well, after all, this was life. It was a rebuke of fate to his own ill-fated and useless vamping. Man did every second whilst women danced, and so no one who knew life had any rare soul for the measure of their own days.

Some freakish thought flashed suddenly in his justification. His mind traveled back down the gloomy avenues of his past, along those last achy years of grinding and grinding poverty. He remembered his upbringing, his every luxury, struggling to make both ends meet in a suburban street, in a hired cottage filled with hired furniture.

He remembered his school days, devoid of pocket money, unable to join in the sports of others, staving with melancholy perseverance for a scholarship, to lighten his mother's burden. Always there was a shadowy, crushing penitence, the struggle to make a living before his school days were over. The unthought books he had fingered at the bookstalls and let drop again.

He had been compelled to wear the weary food he had eaten, the narrow, driving ways of poverty, culminating in his mother's death and his own fear—his, at the age of sixteen years—when the money for her funeral should not be forthcoming.

From Solitude

If there were any hell surely he had lived in it! This other, whose flames mocked him now, could be no worse. Criminally, he remembered the words of the girl who during these latter years had been compelled to him what life might have been of light in life. He had been so sure that he had found that he could meet that ghostly image which had risen from the almost contemptuously. Fate had smiled on him long enough. It was time, indeed, that he helped himself. He turned from the stiller side to the other side of the steamer, paused in a belated spot where he had a cigarette, and paced up and down the more frequent ways.

as he does his in the rarest form of happiness."

"What about your own?" she asked him. "But you are a manufacturer, are you not? Manufacturer or other, that surprises me."

"And me," he acknowledged frankly. "I mean that I wonder I have persevered at it so long."

"But you are a very young man," "Young or old," he answered, "I am one of the young men of a fairer stamp. I am on my way to new things. Do you think, Miss Dalcant, that your country is a good place for one to visit who has no other things?"

She turned to her chair a little more towards him. Against the background of empty spaces, the pale softness of her face seemed to gain a new attractiveness.

"Well, it depends," she said reflectively, "upon what these new things might be which you desire. For an ambitious business man America is a great country."

"But supporting one with business?" he persisted. "Supporting one wanted to develop later and a gift for another method of life?"

"Then I should say that New York is the one place in the world," she told him. "You are speaking of New York?"

"Yes."

Only Rubbish
"You have ambition, I am sure," she continued. "Tell me, are they there?"

"I would like to call them so," he admitted. "I have written a play and three stories, so bad that no one would produce the play or publish the stories."

"You have brought them with you?"

"No! They are where I shall never see them again."

"Never see them again?" she repeated, puzzled.

"I mean that I have left them at home. I have left them there, perhaps, to a certain extent deliberately," she went on. "You see, this is still a very young man. I shall rewrite them when I have settled in my new life. I think that I shall find myself in an environment more conducive to the sort of work I want to do, would rather not be handicapped by the ghosts of my old failures."

She clutched nervously at the end of her rug. She looked up and down along the rows of chairs. There were one or two slumbering forms, but most were empty. There were no promenaders in sight.

Mrs. Mary Sorabian of Newburyport, refugee from Armenia's land of horror, tells of the rule of the "Blue Bird" of "Red" Russia. "Blue Bird" comes to Boston this week and will be uppermost in the minds of many Americans.

In a remarkable review of his time, in the works and his two ventures into real estate, Mr. Moe Stern published in the Boston Sunday Herald a very wise and sane article. Stern is laid bare.

Sugar and Candy
Editor: Thomas Amerasia

I was surprised to see that the country has had used such a small portion of the sugar I found in the country, and in fact I found many of the manufacturing companies are not producing in any sane way about it. A good deal of notoriety has been given the candy industry by the fact that it is responsible for the shortage of sugar to a very large extent; but an article in the Washington Post, a confectioner's paper, the truth of which I can vouch for, shows that the candy industry is not doing wrong like with the public, and that the candy industry is not in any agitation against it. The article has been omitted.

"Authoritative statistical information has been obtained from the census showed that our total consumption of sugar in 1915 was about 4,600,000 tons, or this amount 2,300,000 tons, or approximately half of the sugar consumed in the households and only 2,300,000 tons, was used for all manufacturing purposes. The quantity of sugar used in the manufacture of canned fruits and vegetables, bak-

+ cream, soft drinks, and that candy manufacturers used only 8 percent of it. If the candy manufacturers used more than using any other sugar whatever for the manufacture of the total amount would increase the supply available for household consumption to the point where the total supply would be more than one teaspoonful per person per year."

H. L. FRIEND,
Editor: Thomas Amerasia

I have been a constant reader of the American for years and I have been very much interested in the reference to army medals that Colonel Charles Stevens speaks so much of after the war. I have been very much interested in the controversy since the armistice.

Of many incidents resulting from the war, it seems to me that the one that is the most overlooked, and that is the dough boy who volunteered when Uncle Sam was recruiting soldiers, and many others who made up the nucleus of the army, and I think that the volunteers ought to be mentioned.

Yours truly,
EDWARD CAVANAGH
